Our objective was to assess 1) the association between antepartum hemorrhage (APH) and subsequent delivery by cesarean section (CS) and 2) whether the association was mediated by endocrine or hemodynamic factors. This is a prospective cohort study of 68 women with a first singleton pregnancy who received prenatal care at a community-based hospital before 31 weeks of gestation. Vital signs, endocrine, and hemodynamic responses to delivery were recorded. Women with a history of APH (n = 8) were more likely to deliver by CS than those with no history of APH (odds ratio 4.5, 95% confidence interval [CI] 0.8, 25). Vaginal delivery was associated with a blunted cardiovascular response to delivery, but CS was not associated with cardiovascular or endocrine change. These results suggest that the association between APH and subsequent CS could be explained by endocrine or hemodynamic factors.The 2015 Summer NBA season started on Friday with Steph Curry "The Decider" leading the Golden State Warriors in front of his home fans for the first time.
